About Me

Since early childhood, my parents instilled in me the desire to enroll in Maritime College and become a seafarer. Interest in this field was further heightened by my older brothers and uncles who have been working at sea for many years, achieving successful careers in maritime affairs. A year ago, I had to undergo extensive training at the 'Pacific Gas' company, it was during this practice that I acquired professional skills, including mooring the ship upon entering port, cargo operations involving the loading of Ethylene-Propylene, participating in the preparation of tanks for changing gas from Ethylene to Propylene, deck work, taking navigation watch duties where I gained basic knowledge of using equipment on the bridge. I also mastered life-saving techniques and the management of the ship during adverse weather conditions, assisting the third officer. Additionally, I acquired significant social skills that enabled me to maintain good relationships with every crew member and contribute to the overall morale of our team. Due to high interest and significant motivation, I continue to actively engage in self-education by reading a lot of literature, improving professional skills and personal qualities. I am always ready to participate in any work. Having traversed a certain path and matured, I've come to understand my strengths and weaknesses, allowing me to look more openly at certain aspects, both in my profession and in my life; therefore, I can now confidently say that I am ready to become a professional in my field, prepared to be among the best, and willing to exert all my efforts to become an effective team member.
