Additional information

I worked on different types. I prefer to work on those ships where there are electrical circuits without them. An electrician is like a ship sailing on the ocean without any maps. If there are no diagrams on the ship, the owner of the ship should take this into account, since a serious problem with diagrams can be solved 4 to 5 times faster than without diagrams. Second, I like to work honestly, I say this because I noticed that on many ships, electrical engineers order a lot of things that are not needed for the crew so that the company thinks that this person is trying, but this is a deception and unnecessary expenses for companies. I order only what is necessary and ask the company hiring me to take this into account.
