To Crew Department of Shipping Companies

In 1989, I started working as a wiper on a dry cargo vessel owned by a commercial maritime company. After working for a while, I left the ship to fulfill my military duty. Since I had submitted my sea service certificate to the military branch, I completed my mandatory duty as a naval soldier. During my time in the navy, I received training from Naval Forces Command about the working principles of ship diesel engines. Following the completion of this training, I was awarded an engine officer (machinist) certificate that valid for in all ships-sailing near coastal voyage by the Ministry of Maritime Affairs.

I worked for many years as an engine crew member on large ships which sailing on long voyages. Later, in 1994, I began my first engine officer duty on a dry cargo ship operating in near costal voyages. After completing 24 months working period on the that ship, I took the exam for second enginer certificate and I passed the exams on my first attempt. Again, after 24 months I had worked as a second engineer on the dry cargo ships and I completed the mandatory training by Maritime Affairs of Turkey for second engineer and Chief engineer up to 3000 kW powered engines on all water around the world. After receiving this engineering training, there was no hindering in front of me anymore for increasing my competence. A second time I started working on same duty with a little different my certificate, After I had joined as a second engineer up to 3000 kW powered on the different vessels (dry cargo and chemical tanker) in all water around the world. In 2010, I applied for chief engineer exam. Afterwards, I passed the exam to be a chief engineer on the ship that powered engine up to 3000 kW in all water around the world.

With this competency, I continued to work as a chief engineer on various ships up to 3000 kW powered engines on all water around The world during 36 months.

Finally, in 2015, I have taken my the last competency that I work as a chief engineer which it is Ocean Going Chief Engineer Certificate and I am still working in this position.

My Best Regard
